BLEW HIS HEAD OFF.

Thomas Anderson Makes a Successful Attempt at Suicide.

Thomas Anderson for a number of years coachman for Mrs. Cornwell, committed suicide about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon by blowing off the entire back portion of his head with a shot-gun loaded with buck-shot.

When the police arrived on the scene, Anderson was found on a chair on the front veranda of his cottage with a double shotgun between his knees and a string fastened to the trigger of the gun and his right foot through a loop. What was left of his head hung backward and his face was turned toward the ceiling. He had placed the muzzle of the gun in his mouth and pulled the trigger with his toe by means of the string attachment. Previous to killing himself he had changed his clothes and made other preparations for ending his life.

Deceased had made three previous attempts on his life, and for several days past had been threatening to make another. This was reported to the police and on Monday he was placed under surveillance, only being released yesterday morning. An inquest was held during the evening and a verdict in accordance with the facts returned.

The suicide came to this city in 1881 on the ship Quinlan, which he deserted. He worked in the Pantheon Stables for a time, entering the employ of Mrs. Cornwell six years ago. Anderson was naturally of a despondent turn of mind and occasionally drank too much.

Anderson was born in Denmark on Jan. 14, 1853. About a year ago Dr. McLennan pulled him through after he had taken 13 grains of strychnine with suicidal intent. The day before Anderson killed himself Dr. McLennan examined him for admission to Court Lunatic of Foresters and found him to be physically sound. He was sober at the time, but soon afterward began drinking. It was always after sprees that he developed suicidal mania.
